

Marianthi Batsila holds two bachelor degrees, one in the English Language and Literature and another one in the Spanish Language and Culture, as well as three postgraduate diplomas in English Teacher Training, in Educational Studies and in Educational Administration, while her doctoral thesis titled "Doctorate in Education", focuses on innovative teaching methods and on the production of teaching materials. With 35 years of teaching experience, she has worked in secondary education schools, as well as a School Advisor and Educational Project Coordinator for Primary and Secondary Education, implementing numerous training and innovative programs. In higher education, she has taught a number of courses, such as English for Special Purposes, Academic Writing, Teaching Methodology, Teaching of Special Subjects, and internship practices, using new technologies and applying innovative teaching methods at educational institutions such as ASPAITE, the European University of Cyprus and the University of Thessaly in various departments. She also teaches alternative teaching methods at a postgraduate course implemented at the University of Patras. Her research interests and work relate to teaching methods, new technologies in education, adult education and innovation in education. She has taken part in many Greek and international conferences and has published her work in a number of journals, with more than 450 citations.